COMPOSTING: Giving Food a Second Chance

HOW DOES IT HELP?

Composting is a mixture of decayed organic matter. It is easy to turn waste into valuable soil and fertilizer. It provides organic material for gardening and farming. Composting improves the quality of soil and protects our environment by recycling and reducing waste.

Composting reduces waste, making us less dependent on landfills. Many items that would usually be thrown away can be composted instead.

Compost can be added to gardens to enrich the soil. This adds more nutrients to the crops, resulting in healthier food.

WHAT CAN BE COMPOSTED?

Two types of materials, browns and greens can be composted.

GREENS you might have in your house include fruit and vegetable scraps, grass coffee grounds and paper filters.

BROWNS include dry leaves, wilting flowers, plants and twigs, shredded paper (not glossy or colored) banana peels, egg shell, paper towels, brown bags and bread.

Things you CANNOT compost include any vegetation that has been treated with insecticide, diseased plants, dog or cat poop, meat or fish scraps, and dryer sheets.

HOW DOES IT WORK?

Browns and greens combine with air and heat that create an environment for the materials to break down. In a pile or barrel the materials need to be turned regularly. Sometimes water is needed. Organisms like earthworms and insects help the process.

Nature does the rest.
